

Interview:

Interview 1 – Bilal, 20 (University Student):

“I mostly browse online for ayahs related patience or stress, but it’s not well-organized. If an app could recommend ayahs based on my mood, that would be really beneficial.”

Interview 2 – Ayesha, 40 (Teacher):

“Sometimes I want to write down my reflections after reading Quran. A journaling section in the same app would make it feasible.”

Interview 3 – Hassan, 28 (Young Professional):

“There are Quran apps, but they all feel the same. I’d use one that helps me connect on a personal level i.e not just reading, but reflecting, journaling, and staying regular.”

Interview 4 – Fatima, 32 (Working Mother):

“My schedule is quite busy. I read whenever I can, but I’d like reminders. Also, I’d like to have feature that track my progress so I feel motivated.”

Main Job To Be Done:

a) Situation (When, Where, Who)

- When: When a person desires to read the Quran but struggles with consistency, or when they are experiencing specific moods (sadness, stress, gratitude).
- Where: At home, during commutes, in breaks at work/school, or before bed.
- Who: Muslims of different ages (students, working professionals, parents) who want to build or strengthen their connection with the Holy Quran.

b) Goal (What, Why)

- What: To read the Quran on regular basis, find relevant ayahs conveniently, and reflect via journaling.
- Why: To feel spiritually supported, emotionally strengthened, and create a deeper personal relationship with the Holy Quran.

c) Obstacles (Challenges Faced)

- Forgetting to read or losing consistency.
- Difficulty finding ayahs for specific emotions or situations.
- Less motivation due to lack of visible progress.
- No combined space for journaling and reflection.

d) Motivation

Pain Points:

- Feeling guilty for missing readings.
- Struggling to find ayahs that match what they're experiencing.
- Using multiple apps (Quran + notes app) instead of one integrated place.

Opportunities:

- Smart reminders & progress tracking to ensure consistency.
- AI-driven mood → ayah suggestions for emotional support.
- Integrated journaling with summaries for reflection.
- A dashboard that makes spiritual progress visible and motivating.
